For Sascha, the last year of school begins. Hanging out in the condemned house and making increasingly dangerous tests of courage with his buddies: Is this what the rest of his life will look like? And then something happens. Something that shatters everything that was and calls into questions everything that can still be. To duck away further is unthinkable.

Rough in the noise of the street, full of heart underneath: in his new novel, Johannes Herwig tells of a friendship that seems to be above everything, and of the difficulty of taking responsibility – for those you care about, and for yourself.

What is a friendship worth and how much does responsibility weigh? The new exciting novel for young adults by Paul Maar Award winner Johannes Herwig.
