In the morning it's time for daycare – but how does one get there? On the kiddie seat of a bicycle? Walking? Pulled in a wagon? By bike it's cosy -- you can doze along the way and giggle together at the bike rack. Riding on the bus is fun, especially when your favourite stuffed animal is in the seat next to you and Grandpa is there to make sure you get off at the right stop. On foot there is lots to see, and by scooter you can race like the wind. Some even come to daycare by sled or by boat! The best thing of all is that everyone arrives, happy to share the day together.

In playful rhyme, Cornelia Boese recounts the many ways of getting to daycare, and Julia Dürr's illustrations set the scene of each day's bracing morning routine with affection and humor.

Julia Dürr • Cornelia Boese Ready, Set, Go to Daycare!

Julia Dürr studied illustration in Münster and Brussels. Now she lives in Berlin and Lower Lusatia and she illustrates children's books. Although her little son is not quite ready for daycare, she loves to travel about Germany – with her son, a folding bike and a bike trailer, and by train.

Cornelia Boese, born 1970 in Würzburg, studied at the Institute of Music and worked as an opera prompter, stage musician and moderator of children's concerts. Since 2015 she's occupied as a freelance poet. She loved speedy wintertime sled trips to school from snow-covered vineyards, and riding her pony to music lessons.
